The Rules of Arguments: Part 3

Penguin and Mev's last rule:

4. Apology

In our daily life, we often say sorry.

Weirdly, this is so hard to say when we argue with our partners.

Probably the reason why is...

1

...because you feel like you lose if you say it first.

2

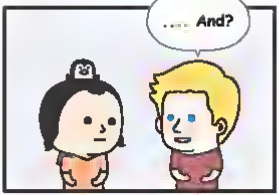
Or you feel like his fault is bigger than yours.

3

Or maybe you don't want it to seem like you love them more.

I'm sorry Penguin that I was nasty

OK. I forgive you
Just say that you're too tired to talk next time
OK~



Mev used to tell me this.

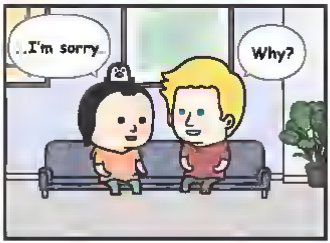
Penguin. Saying sorry between us is nothing about hurting our egos or being a winner and a loser

If we can apologize about our mistakes, we can solve the problem without arguments

Of course we should say why we're sorry when we apologize too

And it doesn't mean that one of us loves the other more.
I think it's evidence of us trying hard to make our relationship nicer.

I know that you really hate saying sorry to me. Ha ha.
But Penguin, do you want to try?



..I'm sorry..
Why?

Because I was impatient
and shouted at you.
Hehe.. Good.
Come here~

So, these are our 4 rules.

1. Don't hold a complaint in. Tell each other straight away.

2. Don't say mean things because of anger.

3. Don't pretend the problem is resolved when it is not.

4. Apology

For the last 8 years...

It doesn't mean that our relationship was a calm pool without any waves.

But like a piece of metal that was been hammered
and hardened it gets stronger.....

I believe that good fights made the line thicker and thicker.
